It Is With Sadness We Announce...

By RABBI MYCHAL COPELAND

You have seen the email announcements when someone has died. What is shiva, and why does our entire community get a notice about it? In the Jewish tradition, when someone dies there is an acknowledgment that we pass through stages of mourning.

After a funeral, the mourner enters shiva, Hebrew for the "seven" days of this stage. During this time, the mourner shouldn't have to enter the everyday world yet (if they are able to step back from it). There are various customs that may be followed, but the most prominent in the Sha'ar Zahav community is the shiva minyan, a short evening service. When someone has experienced a death, there is a tendency to hide away from friends and community. Our tradition says simply, "No." Amidst our pain and sorrow, we are not permitted to silo ourselves.

When I first came to SZ, I was blown away by the number of people who show up for mourners. Shiva is a deep value in our community. And it's easy — all it takes is literally showing up (and don't worry if you don't know the prayers!). It's customary to bring food as a way of saying, "You are going to keep on living."

But if you can't bring something, the essential piece is showing up. Show up even if you didn't know the person who died — that's why the mourner will tell us a bit about them during the service. Show up even if you don't know the member.

Shiva is one of the wisest and most profound rituals in Jewish tradition. The genius of the shiva minyan ritual is that community stands by our side at the moment when we are grappling with the toughest questions about our existence. The shiva minyan makes it clear: what matters is that in the face of the unfathomable, we extend compassion to each other. Some congregants, observing shiva with family in other cities, choose to observe Shloshim, the end of the first thirty days of mourning with a gathering of friends in our community. Shiva or Shloshim gatherings are also particularly meaningful when the loss is of a non Jewish relative.

If you'd like to learn more about how we can show up for each other during times of illness or grief, look for my class this spring called "Hineni: I am Present for You."

Everyone Is Welcome

By NANCY LEVIN, President

When you think of Sha'ar Zahav, you think "synagogue," right? But Sha'ar Zahav is also a non-profit organization.

Like other non-profits, we have a board of directors ("Va'ad"), executive leadership, managers and staff, and member donors. Unlike KQED or SF MOMA, where the member's role is to make an annual/monthly donation, Sha'ar Zahav membership also means being engaged in community.

Many of us work on projects together and with staff and clergy. We bond, we grow, we disagree, we learn, we teach, we pray. We even become board members. Also, of course, we live our Jewish values in community.

We have a long, proud tradition of lay leadership, with members owning and leading our organization. Our leadership is fluid - everyone is welcome to find a role by stepping forward, choosing an area of interest, and getting involved. A healthy congregation takes a community of individuals saying "Hineni" - I AM HERE. Our active membership makes us a dynamic place, with pods of ideas, projects, and experimentation throughout. But, it may be hard to know the best person to talk to on any given topic.

"Everyone is welcome to find a role by stepping forward."

- Nancy Levin

It might take a few conversations to get the full picture. Communication may be uneven with so many people in the mix. And staff can feel like they have hundreds of bosses instead of one.

I suspect that if we were a more typical non-profit, communications would be more linear and decision-making more obvious. There might be fewer people to check in with, and less "process." But without the ability to be engaged, nurture a creative spark in ourselves or others, lift each other up to do what we never thought possible and become leaders, we lose the essence of what allows us to become a sacred community.

NEW MEMBER PROFILES

I came to San Francisco about a week after graduating college, after spending a summer here as an intern. I absolutely fell in love with the look, feel and energy of the city, and couldn't wait to call it home. I started working as a software engineer on the privacy team at Facebook. Having grown up in an interfaith home, I didn't end up exploring my Jewish heritage until I was in college, where I dove in headfirst. I became a Birthright recruiter and joined a Jewish fraternity.

When I arrived in San Francisco, finding a new, strong Jewish community where I could feel welcome was a top priority for me. I was immediately taken by the warmth and friendliness of CSZ and knew very quickly that this was the place for me. When I'm not at work, I love to explore San Francisco's absolutely fantastic live music scene. I can't remember a week when I haven't gone to some kind of concert. I also enjoy training at my Mixed Martial Arts gym in the Mission, and I'm a complete film buff. I'm very excited to meet you all in the following weeks, and I can't wait to get to know the community on a more personal level.

My Legacy Gift

By ROBERT TAT

I've been asked to write about why I completed a Letter of Intent to leave a Legacy gift to Sha'ar Zahav. To understand why the synagogue is important to me, I have to go back to the very beginning.

I grew up with a strong sense of history. I'm a third-generation native San Franciscan with Jewish roots at Congregation Emanu-El (where I first met Allan Gold in our second-grade religious school class). My maternal great-grandfather came to California from Germany in the 1850s and developed a successful dry goods business in Monterey. So, for me Sha'ar Zahav is a continuation of what one might call that pioneering spirit.

In 1977 mainstream synagogues were not welcoming of LGBT folks. So, our three co-founders began holding services in the basement of Glide Church in the Tenderloin. I attended there during the first months of the synagogue's existence, and have been a member ever since. Seven years later the Danvers Street building (the first Home of Our Own), proudly displayed our logo - a Jewish star with a lambda superimposed. It was the first highly visible synagogue with a specific outreach to LGBT Jews. When I first set foot in Glide's basement room over 40 years ago I could never have dreamed of what Sha'ar Zahav would become. We were making history then, and continue to do so today. Sha'ar Zahav has grown far beyond our original roots to embrace a wider diversity. We have played an important role in the larger Jewish community. Most importantly, we've helped bring about acceptance of LGBT people in mainstream Judaism. I'm proud that my legacy gift will help ensure that Sha'ar Zahav will continue into the future.

Security at Sha'ar Zahav

By IRENE OGUS, Chair - Security Task Force

Did you recently attend High Holy Day services at the Herbst? Have you attended a Saturday morning service or a Beit Sefer class for your child? If so, thank you for being willing to show your IDs and for helping us with our security trials.

Sha'ar Zahav, along with most Jewish houses of worship and institutions, is trying several new security protocols. Access to our building is more controlled and monitored these days.

Many thanks to the parents and the Education Committee for their diligent work in creating these protocols. These tests will help us formulate plans for Friday night services and other major events. Because Herbst Theatre is in a public building, we were limited in what we could do and our security programs were different there than for our own building.

“We are deeply committed to providing safety to all who worship with us, our staff, lay leaders and those with whom we share our building.”

- Irene Ogus

We counted these past High Holy Days as a security success - most notably because 80% of our worshippers pre-registered to attend! That's an impressive number - approximately 600 people.

A recent b'nai mitzvah at our building also gave us an opportunity to verify ID and check-in people who had accepted their invitations, all while continuing to be the warm and welcoming community we have always aspired to be. In both cases, attendees expressed their gratitude, understood the need, and said they felt safe and protected.

For the past year, our Security Task Force has been working to identify areas of vulnerability and opportunities for infrastructure improvements. Our success in obtaining a grant from the California Office of Emergency Services has allowed us to install improved exterior lighting and CCTV cameras as well as an intercom system.

In the coming months we will be replacing our front doors, and adding protective film and additional hardware to our windows. A new alarm system will be installed which includes devices for our greeters to use in the event of an emergency. Additional security training is in our plans, and we're exploring several options for controlling access to our building.

Security is a work in progress. The need is obvious; the change is challenging and sometimes painful. Please bear with us as we evolve; we are all in this together. We are deeply committed to providing safety to all who worship with us, our staff, lay leaders and those with whom we share our building.

As Rabbi Copeland said in her Rosh Hashana sermon, as a community we have an obligation to take care of each other, to overcome our fears and take comfort in our communal strength. We need to recruit more greeters and provide training for them in how to implement the security protocols.
